This page was last edited on 28 November at Have the wise and good of all ages been deceived in believing that "the heavens declare the glory of God" [Ps. William de Witt Hyde. Without them Christianity may be true, but it has lost its distinctive character. Norton next illustrates the position that the miracles of Jesus form an essential element of that internal evidence, which, we are often told, is the sufficient and only valid proof of the truth of Christianity. What can a belief in them conduce to a true Christian faith? To Works of Andrew Preston Peabody a Christian is to have a perpetual consciousness of the truths which Jesus revealed - to feel our spiritual relations and condition as constantly and as vividly as we feel our earthly estate and our temporal wants.
