The position of these glosses as the forth and last stratum is not a trivial one, and should be explained. Some of us –the brave ones– got on our vehicles and set out to explore the new world: hoping to find the promised signs of a new life. The position of Danish and other languages in Denmark and at Danish universities. Originally, the line would have been straight all through, with a slight deviation but a significant one, see chapter 8. Today we face a crucial dilemma with potentially irreversible consequences: we can either move from English hegemony to English monopoly which would exclude all other languages from science; or we can advance through a XXIst century with reinvigorated plurilingualism that reinforces the diversity of languages, discourse strategies and cultural models in the strategic field of science and higher education. It is useful to divide the content of this level into two areas: first, grammar and saber-decir tienen que ir de la mano.
