This reflection helps students learn and use strategies on a self-conscious level. I predict that there must be a lot. For our purposes, this means that to help our students to become expert readers, we must model the strategies of Improving Comprehension with Think-Aloud Strategies readers using authentic texts novels, short stories, non-fiction books, newspaper articles, arguments, and Internet sites and then support students in taking on these expert stances for themselves as they read independently.

After modeling, a teacher would then have students work in small groups, so that they can model the strategies for each other. And later on he started drinking because there is always pressure, isn't there? These strategies included general reading processes but went well beyond these to include many text- and task-specific processes particular to reading narrative. The book also includes many illuminating samples of student work, with a little more than 100 pages of examples. It is not fair of you to ask me what it doesn't say! Advanced Search.
